EDWARD R. MURROW AWARD TO WPR PRESIDENT

Leo. C. Lee, founder and president of Western Public Radio, has received the prestigious Edward R. Murrow Award for 1989 from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. Each year, CPB honors an individual who has made outstanding contributions to public radio by fostering its growth, quality, and public image. The Murrow Award is named for the veteran broadcaster, reporter, producer, executive and government administrator who symbolized responsible, courageous, and imaginative use of the electronic media.

Presentation of public radio's highest honor took place at a CPB awards luncheon in San Francisco on May 19, during the annual Public Radio Conference. CPB Board member Marshall Turner said, "Leo Lee has contributed his tremendous talents to the training of both aspiring and seasoned producers through WPR workshops and through the National Radio Training Project." Turner quoted a Murrow Award judge, who said, "Leo's voice has always been an active one, true to the Murrow spirit....He is true to the belief that it is up to the people in the medium to give the medium its power, to realize its promise." Another judge said, "He has exhibited selflessness and persistence, and has let nothing stop him from making a difference in public radio...and he has done it in the public interest, not in self interest."

Known in public broadcasting circles as "the Johnny Appleseed of the airwaves," Leo has developed Western Public Radio as a prime training center for public broadcasters, with particular emphasis on radio production training for minorities and women. In 1980, with CPB funding, WPR offered the first-ever training session for women engineers in radio. WPR has also been at the forefront as the first national training facility for Latinos and blind producers. Leo heads WPR's National Radio Training Project, presented each year since 1982. It provides training in mid-level and advanced radio production and in radio drama. Seventy-one percent of the national producers who have participated have been women and minorities.

Leo began his career in the newspaper business, starting out in 1941 covering city hall for the Oakland Post-Inquirer. He joined the San Francisco Examiner in 1943 where, at age 24, he became one of the youngest city editors in San Francisco history. He remained at that post for thirteen years. After working at public relations and political campaigns for ten years, Leo bought The Placer Herald in Auburn, the oldest weekly newspaper in California. In 1971, he sold the paper and returned to San Francisco, becoming the western regional editor for National Public Radio.

During this time, he produced seven award-winning documentaries, focusing on a wide range of social issues. Among them were "A Sea of Language," which addressed the subject of the changing English language, and "Gum-Sahn - Gold Mountain," which studied changing Chinese-American values.

When the NPR western bureau moved to Los Angeles in 1978, Leo and a group of colleagues founded Western Public Radio, and located at Fort Mason Center. Incorporated as a national radio production and training organization, WPR is the only center of its kind in the country, earning national and international recognition. It provides assistance in proposal development, production, marketing, promotion and distribution. Independent producers, for a minimum fee, work in a state-of-the-art facility using CBC and BBC sound effects and a large record library.

WPR's facilities include five fully equipped four and eight-track production studios, three of which are designed for music recording and drama production. WPR is the West Coast's premier production and training facility for radio drama. Clients have included the BBC and CBC, California Public Radio, Radio Bilingue, The Native American Public Broadcasting Consortium and The National Asian American Telecommunications Association.

In addition to his busy training and production schedule, which often involves extensive travel around the country, Leo was also a member of the Fort Mason Foundation Board of Directors from 1980 to 1987, and has continued to serve on the Board's Program Committee. When asked about his feelings on receiving the award, his response was, "I think it's fitting that this most prestigious and coveted award in public broadcasting should go to someone at Fort Mason Center."

Leo's persistence continues. Active on a daily basis in WPR's already-established programs, he is also looking to the future. "WPR's long-range planning is geared toward establishing a unique media arts center," he said. "The center would include radio, film, advanced audio components, and a radio theater."

This month, WPR offers the Basic Radio Production Workshop, a six-week course designed to give hands-on experience with all skills necessary to produce a radio report (see Visual Arts and Media). For information about Western Public Radio, call 771-1160.

SUMMER FUN AT FORT MASON

Harbor seals and other pinnipeds are the subject of Man & The Sea Open House.

This month, several activities and programs especially for children or the whole family are presented at Fort Mason. Without leaving town, adventures are available.

Friends of the Library Giant Book Sale in Pier 3, with bargains in all categories, books for all ages, and a silent auction of treasures. The Book Bay Bookstore in Building C is also open on a regular basis. See June 1.

13th Annual Free Folk Music Festival, with workshops for adults and for kids running all day, both Saturday and Sunday. The emphasis is on participation and fun, plus performances. It's called "A gift to San Francisco." See June 3.

Man & The Sea Open House, with a slide presentation by the curator of the California Marine Mammal Center on pinnipeds of the California coast: elephant seals, harbor seals, California sea lions, Steller sea lions, northern fur seals, and Guadalupe fur seals. For adults, but interested children from about age 10 could also enjoy this. See June 5.

Parking Area Renovation

The parking area renovation project at Fort Mason Center is proceeding ahead of schedule. Watch for public vehicular reopening, perhaps several days earlier than June 1. Minor work, such as concrete islands and new night illumination, will continue for several more weeks, but these activities promise little disruption.

The new parking area provides 100 additional legal parking spaces, better vehicular circulation, additional disabled-accessible parking, a designated motorcycle parking area, and safer, well-defined pedestrian zones and crosswalks. Soon, additional seating facilities and bicycle racks will be provided by the National Park Service.

Thanks for your patience and understanding throughout the month of May. Your cooperation helped the National Park Service and its contractors deliver an outstanding project.

San Francisco Children's Art Center offers instruction in various media for ages 2-12, with summer sessions beginning June 20. There will also be two fund-raisers for the Children's Art Center: the Giant Benefit Garage Sale (see June 10) and the 3rd Annual Benefit Auction Party (see June 19).

A Fairy Tale Odyssey, a collage of characters from classical and traditional tales (June 10 through July 2). Wind in the Willows, an adaptation of the classic romp, from River Bank to Wildwood to Toad Hall and back again (July 8 through 30). Presented by Young Performers Theatre.

The 4th Annual Great SF Bike Adventure, a pleasure bike ride around San Francisco, ending with a celebration at the Great Meadow, upper Fort Mason. An easy ride for everyone. See June 11.

Ongoing programs especially for children are presented throughout the summer. See Classes and Workshops section for details.

Poetry Film Workshop presents the Children's Animation Workshop; The Oceanic Society conducts Seacamp and Sail Camp, introducing children to the marine environment and to sailing; Environmental Traveling Companions sponsors Whitewater Raft Trips and Sea Kayaking Adventures for pre-teens, teenagers and young adults from May through September, with a special Whitewater Rafting Family Day in August; Blue Bear School of Music has summer programs for young musicians, including Make Your Own Music (ages 9-14), Music Games (ages 6-8), and Teen Rock Workshop (ages 12-18); Fort Mason Art Center offers children's art classes as well as classes and workshops for all ages in various media.
